

Limerick Names in the Tudor Fiants

The Elizabethan Fiants are available online starting at

<https://archive.org/stream/reportofdeputyke1720irel#page/260/mode/1up>

Initially I used photocopies of the modern reprint until I stumbled across the online version of the original, which was easier to use. Quite by chance this discovery came at a point where there is an error in the reprint which would have caused a whole page of names to be omitted. In the reprint under 6490, pages 410 and 411 are transposed.

The Elizabethan Fiants caused some difficulty with their long lists of people who were given pardons. Looking up Limerick in the index was not sufficient, because whole Fiants might refer to Limerick but not have Limerick within the document. It was therefore necessary to look at each document to see if they might be Limerick from the other placenames within. There was also the problem that some Fiants meandered from one county to another. In these cases I started with the first readily identifiable Limerick placename and stopped when it became clear that I was in another county (sometimes indicated by placename, sometimes by personal name). In the case of 6552 where the Mulryan chief brings in his clan, there is a possibility that some of those named are from the Tipperary side.

I hope that this is in more or less alphabetical order, but I have tended to group names that are clearly the same together despite slightly different spellings. I admit to inconsistency in the expansion of the abbreviation of Ed, sometime spelt with an O sometimes with a U.
